Campus CRU grows, religious awareness rises

By Sean Gossard
Staff Writer

Over the past few years Campus Crusade for Christ or CRU has drawn larger crowds around the Salisbury campus.

For over the past decade CRU has provided a religious outlet for Christians on campus either through bible studies or various service activities. In the past years CRU has went by the name Student Impact with the subheading as Campus Crusade for Christ however after 2004 the group decided on the name Campus Crusade for Christ.

Throughout the past decade when CRU came to campus the numbers have ranged in the mid thirties. However in the past two years the number of members has more then tripled.

One member, Alan Krill said "When I was a freshman in fall of 2002, CRU had around 30 people attending the weekly Thursday night meetings."

Now, he says, up to 150 to 200 people are attending the Thursday night meetings every week.

CRU is a multi-campus organization that has groups at more then one thousand campuses around the United States.

Many of the other campuses have full staffs which work with the group full-time; however Salisbury only has Regional Directors to help with the group. Salisbury's CRU is one of the largest non-staffed Campus Crusade's in the Mid-Atlantic region.

The growing popularity of CRU can mainly be attributed to the Student Leaders that give many hours of work.

Alan Krill, the worship leader, says "More and more freshman seem to get involved every year, see CRU on page 2

Students rally against "Waffly" Wayne

Peter Staubs/The Flyer

Students discuss boundaries of sexual assault in Sokolow's date rape forum

By Jodie Lehrer
Staff Writer

President of the National Center for Higher Education Risk Management (NCHERM), Brett Sokolow spoke to Salisbury University students about the widespread concern of sexual assault and date rape on college campuses across the country.

"I came here to create a forum...to talk about a tough issue together," said Sokolow.

In light SU's recent incidences of what is suspected to be date rape, the lecture drew a crowd of approximately 100 students, including every fraternity and sorority at SU being represented. Many Resident Assistants attended with a number of their residents.

"I don't think a lot of people know the different laws," said St. Martin RA and member of AST, Megan Igoe.

Sokolow speaks at colleges across the country to inform students what exactly is constituted as sexual assault, as many students do not realize the severity of some situations.

"Girls may not know there being taken advantage of," said Igoe.

A lot of college campuses across the nation do not treat sexual assault as a big issue and do not see the urgent need to address the issue; many campuses believe that having speakers like Sokolow is a waste of money.

"I think they're really important," said Igoe of lecturers.

In addition to being president of the NCHERM, Sokolow is also a distinguished attorney in cases dealing with sexual assault. Most of his speech at SU was a presentation of an actual case that occurred about eight years ago, in which he presented all of the facts to the students, and then allowed them to ask questions and become the jury.

The case involved a young man and a young woman whom engaged in sexual intercourse. Due to the intoxication of the woman, she pressed charges of sexual assault in the second degree.

According to Sokolow, SU was the first campus, of the 34 he has visited since August to have a majority vote for not guilty.

Sokolow continued his lecture by thanking the men for the large turnout. "We're [men] a big part of the solution to this problem," he said.

During the presentation of the case, Sokolow made sure to inform students what exactly constitutes sexual assault. A common misconception among many students is that if there was mutual consent, no crime was committed. However in 49 of the 50 states, sexual and therefore even as people graduate, the ministry continues to grow with new people taking on those vacated roles.

In order to keep CRU organized with the growing number of members different sub-committees were made in order to accomplish a variety of tasks. CRU has made everything from teams that plan the activities to teams for planning retreats, all depending on the different people's strengths.

"It's a really good time to fellowship with friends and to learn how God is relevant in college life," Tara Sullivan, sophomore and member of CRU, says.

assault in the second degree is committed if one of the persons involved was intoxicated, and therefore could not make a logical decision.

"I don't believe it's okay to disrespect someone that is that drunk," said Sokolow.

Sokolow ended his presentation by challenging students to take part in making their campus a safer one. "Think about what you all need to do to make SU a safer community," said Sokolow.

Climatologist sets the record straight on global warming

By Sean Gossard
Staff Writer

Acclaimed climatologist Dr. Patrick J. Michaels spoke to Salisbury students this past Wednesday about Global Warming and its perception in the media.

Dr. Michaels teaches Environmental Science at the University of Virginia and has published articles in Climatic Change, the Washington Post, and the Wall Street Journal. Among his writings includes his book Meltdown: the predictable distortion of global warming by scientists, politicians, and the media.

In his articles and books he deals with the media's altered perception on Global Warming and its effect on the Earth. Dr. Michaels illustrates how the rise of Global Warming is insignificant compared to other factors.

In his discussion he showed that there were no correlations between climate and global warming. He used the temperature of the Earth during the past decade to show that the increase was only slight.

During the seminar he stated "Even if we lower emissions and energy by 25% there will still be no difference in the rise of the temperature, as if we didn't do anything."

He showed how many scientists have research proposals that get passed very easily by scientific boards. He explained how many scientists of today will do anything to get money for funding from the government. By the end of the seminar he opened the floor up to various questions from the audience. Many of the more liberal members did not agree with his views on global warming and those views came out during this part of the program.

Student Health Services responds to date rape article

Dear Editor,

We are writing to correct misinformation printed in the October 17, 2005 edition of The Flyer in the article titled, "SU Students Possible Date Rape Victims".

First and foremost, many of the statements and information in the article were attributed to an interview with Cynthia McCready, a nurse practitioner who works in Student Health. Ms. McCready, in fact, was not interviewed, and did not provide information or statements to anyone from The Flyer staff. It is important that students who access care in Student Health understand that providers do not talk with the media about specific cases. Jennifer Berkman, director of Student Health, was interviewed, and did supply general information to the reporter, in an effort to educate the campus community about the possible existence of date rape drugs in the Salisbury community.

Only information necessary to explain to students about where the incidents had taken place, in general terms, was given to the reporter. General descriptions of how the students were affected were given so that other students might understand how they could be affected, as well. However, no names or specific details of incidents were discussed. We asked that the reporter be sensitive to students who had been affected who might read the article and become upset by anything that might identify too closely with their particular circumstance. We hope that students understand how hard we work to protect their anonymity and privacy. We want them always to feel comfortable accessing care here.

Some of the information in the article is misleading and needs to be clarified. In the description of GHB, the reporter described it as coming in three forms, and being legally used in the US. Sources we provided state that neither Rohypnol nor GHB are legal in the US, and neither is legally manufactured here. GHB is a clear liquid that looks like water. While it can have a salty taste, most often it does not. Rohypnol is typically a white pill, though there is a counterfeit product manufactured abroad that has a brownish-pink tint to it. Ketamine, a third "club drug" discussed with the reporter, comes in a white powder form. The only other drug discussed was Valium, and its possible use as a date rape drug, because it has similar, though milder effects, as the other drugs discussed. This is the only drug discussed that is legal in the United States. The reporter needs to clarify that one of these drugs is used in the treatment of narcolepsy.

Again, it is our intent to educate students in an effort to try to prevent them from becoming victims. However, we would never do that at the expense of a student already victimized. We hope that students have a clearer understanding of date rape drugs and the information presented in the article by way of this letter. We apologize to any student who felt compromised when they thought Ms. McCready gave information to The Flyer.

Students affected by date rape or seeking more information about date rape drugs can access information at: www.4woman.gov or by calling Life Crisis at 410-749-HELP.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Berkman
Director, Student Health Services

MAR clarifies submission guidelines

Dear Editor,

The October 3rd copy of The Flyer printed some misinformation in its article about the Mid-Atlantic Review titled "Mid-Atlantic Review Attracts Students with Cash Prize." According to the article, students interested in submitting their work first needed to send their work to The Scarab. The Scarab, however, was the name of the literary magazine before it became the Mid-Atlantic Review. In addition, the article insinuated that in order to submit work, one must be on the MAR staff. This is not the case.

The Mid-Atlantic Review is the current student-run literary journal of SU. The magazine is currently accepting submissions to be considered for publication in the 2006 edition. Any student, regardless of major, is encouraged to submit. This year the Mid-Atlantic Review will reward cash prizes of $100, $50, and $25 to the first, second and third place winners of the contest in two categories: fiction and poetry. To enter the contest, please send a manuscript with a cover page that contains contact information along with a check for $5 made payable to Salisbury University to Campus Box # 2048, Salisbury University, Salisbury, MD 21801. Students do not have to enter the contest to submit work and be published. Those interested only in publication please drop off a copy of your manuscript with a cover letter containing contact information to the MAR box located in the English department on the third floor of Holloway Hall.

Judges for the contest will consist of poets and writers not associated with the MAR or Salisbury University. MAR staff is not eligible to enter the contest. Submissions should be in before the end of January. Once again, MAR staff would like to encourage any interested students to submit.

Thank you,
Kate Shelley, Josh Hughes and Noah Wood
MAR staff

Swim Team expresses concern over article

Dear Editor,

We would like to express our concern about the article recently printed in The Flyer about the SU Swim Team. As this article expressed the opinions of only one person, it appeared to be particularly biased. From our understanding, an editorial piece is an article which primarily expresses opinions with little or no research involved, characteristics this article appears to have. However, it was not made clear anywhere in The Flyer that this piece was an editorial, depending upon one person's experience and opinions as its sole source of information. Moreover, it was printed on the front page, a spot generally reserved for objective news articles. Our classmates and fellow students have expressed similar concerns about the nature of this article.

The SU Swim Team is a racially, religiously, sexually, academically, and otherwise diverse group of highly motivated, talented, and well-rounded student athletes. As a team, we pride ourselves in dedication, support, and involvement, and were disappointed to find ourselves portrayed so negatively, never being interviewed about the team as a whole, or about the events detailed in the article. We are aware that some of the activities at the party mentioned in the article have been deemed questionable. We are currently taking steps to educate ourselves and our associates about the acts in question in order to avoid confusion; to prevent similar issues from occurring at Salisbury University in the future. We hope the university community knows that we would never do anything to intentionally cause humiliation, isolation, or discomfort to anyone, especially someone interested in becoming a part of the SU Swim Team family.

We have worked very hard to promote our reputation, receiving praise for many years about the strong support system formed within the SU Swim Team, and participating in various community service activities, including Relay for Life and water safety instruction for local schools.

We would hope that in the future, the staff of The Flyer would approach us about any articles concerning the activities and nature of our team. We appreciate your time and anticipate your understanding as to the concerns addressed in this letter.

With greatest respect,
Yours Sincerely,
The Salisbury University Swim Team

Bookstore needs new system of security

By Megan Wintersteen
Paginator

As times change, people change, and with this comes the change in the regulations and standards that keep us in line. However, there is a fine line between acceptable and overboard, and recently the SU bookstore has been overstepping its boundaries.

Apparently, stealing at the bookstore has become a problem over the years; so much so that they have been strictly enforcing their "no bags allowed" policy and many students have become disturbed.

"I understand people may try to steal things," says sophomore Jaime Martin. "I also think that putting the bags outside where the person at the desk can't see them it is not a great idea."

Their policy requires students to leave bags, even large purses in some cases, outside the entrance to the bookstore; which is potentially dangerous.

"I think it's more of a safety risk to leave your personal items outside in a hallway," sophomore Michael Adkins says. This poses another important question: Who is responsible if someone's belongings are taken from there?

Perhaps the critical question is: What exactly is this teaching the students about the attitude of the University? "I basically feel like they [the university] don't trust us," says senior Brad Street. "I would never steal anything."

By mandating that students leave their bags and purses outside, it seems as though the bookstore is assuming that the majority of students are dishonest. Although this procedure may be entirely precautionary, how many stealing incidents have there been to justify the incrimination of the entire student body? And, in that case, what are the detectors at the exit doors for?

"There are scanners at the exit doors of the bookstore and if they're in place, they should function properly to ensure no one takes anything," says Adkins.

"It's just really inconvenient to leave my things outside the door," says sophomore Dianne Murphy. "Maybe instead of leaving them on the ground they could give us somewhere to put our things."

Several students have agreed that they would feel more comfortable with the policy if there was some kind of unit to hold their personal effects.

"I'd feel better if I put my things inside the walk-in area in a cubby hole unit," says Martin.

Mr. Advice

Mr. Advice answers all your questions, even private ones, in complete confidentiality. Send your questions to: kb04128@students.salisbury.edu Don't be shy, ask anything!

Why do people enforce taking antibiotics all the way through? I mean they taste nasty. I feel horrible after taking it and I just don't understand the 10-day span thing. I stopped after 5 days.

Well, first off, it's doctor prescribed, meaning you should do what you are told, because if you are taking them in the first place, you probably have an infection of some sort. They taste nasty because that's what medicine tastes like, well at least some do. You may feel horrible after taking them only because it has side effects while it's doing its job. More specifically, antibiotics work on the cellular level and they have to, I repeat have to, be taken correctly. If you were to stop, for example on day 5 just because you feel better, you probably only killed off the weak bacteria. The remaining bacteria that did not get killed by the first 5-day dose means that they are the stronger bacteria and because you stopped, they will grow. When they do, they become resistant to the antibiotics. This means that the infection will most likely reappear and you will be sick again. So, when it comes to antibiotics, let's not play around.

Why do you do Mr. Advice?

It gives me the chance to talk to the Salisbury University community. I feel connected to the campus when I can give back and why not through advice? I do have to pay attention to what advice I give, because I do not want people taking what I say the wrong way. It's important to stay focused on the consequences that will occur for people. In all, I do enjoy this because it is fun. Some people read it, get ideas and whatnot, and use it in their own personal life. I'd like to know that I'm helping someone out there who can't ask anyone else, or just wants to ask me for advice. It lets me know that I am giving back to the community along with the other things that I do around campus.

I'm so unsure about moving in with someone, I mean we've been together for so long. Why not? But I guess I'm just a little hesitant about it all, that's a big thing for me.

It is a big thing, but many people these days are doing it. I can't really give you too much advice about deciding whether you should or shouldn't. I won't be making that decision, but I can give you different perspectives about it all. Many do it because it saves a lot of money when they both happen to move out. The problem with that is what happens if they break up? How are things distributed? If they both feel strongly about each other, on the contrary they would usually end up getting married. That's a plus. It really depends on how strong you feel about each other and whether or not you both are ready for it. This is something you honestly have to feel this is where you are going with it all. If you were to talk to someone who is old school or has old morals, they probably would say no only because when you make that decision, that usually means you two are getting married. Sometimes moving in before marriage, messes it up and sometimes it doesn't. But no one should make that decision to say yes but you.

Community hosts Halloween events

By Carlena Mattiello
Staff Writer

Halloween events became a rarity this year, but not for a few dedicated local organizations whose fundraising festivities are in full swing this weekend.

Parsonburg Fire Department's Haunted Hayride and the Salisbury School's Frightful Forest kick off the Halloween weekend with thrills, chills and some scary fun for everyone.

The PFD started their fundraiser many years ago as a simple haunted hayride. Today, the after-dark outing includes the hayride, a walk through a haunted forest, and refreshments.

This was a common firehouse tradition for the majority of surrounding towns only a few years ago. Not anymore. Recently, some towns have gotten too big for firehouses to handle such a festivity. Steve Calloway, paramedic for the Berlin Fire Company admits it's simply not what it used to be. "I remember when we were able to have those events here," Calloway says. "The town is too big now and there are just too many kids."

A few small towns still have neighborhood Halloween parties held at the firehouse, such as Hebron and Mandela Springs Fire Departments, but it saddens avid Calloway and those like him to see such wholesome, long-lived traditions diminish.

The BFC still participates in the spirit of Halloween by passing out candy to children, and according to Calloway, it is all any of the fire departments of larger towns can do anymore. However, both the PFD and the Salisbury School are happy to be able to host their Halloween events.

According to the Assistant Chief of the PFD, Steve White, hayrides go from the firehouse to the woods and back on a roughly a mile-long hayride, and dropped off to walk through haunted forest, complete with winding paths, quicksand and "creatures of the night."

White believes the hayride and haunted forest would be enjoyable for anyone looking to have a little fun. "People are satisfied with the hayride alone," White says.

There is no age requirement for the event; however, parents need to be sensitive to their child's tolerance for fear. Whether a child rides or not is up to the discretion of the parent. "Sometimes we have 4 and 5-year-olds who see you [in costume] and laugh and others will cry hysterically," White says. "Every parent has to know their own kid."

White noted there are people to assist riders through the haunted forest. Parents are also asked to assess their child's ability to walk these paths by themselves. Safety is always a priority.

"Everyone has a good time," White says. "We draw a lot of people each year and they seem to enjoy it very much."

Director for the Salisbury School's Frightful Forest, Matt Meekins, believes this first-year fundraiser is a fun way to raise money for Horizons, a national student enrichment program dedicated to improving, social, educational and recreational lives of children in the local area.

Students aspire to make it in the fashion world

By Stephanie Sokerka
Staff Writer

Young students who have a "passion for fashion" are beginning to take the world of fashion into their own hands. They are trying to make a name for themselves, a name that screams individuality. Some of these very creative minds are learning how to do that here at SU.

Junior Ishmawiyi Claiborne remembers his interest in fashion starting at a very young age. "I got involved with fashion sooner than I realized I did. I started doing different things with jeans and becoming more tuned with clothing and styles around tenth grade," he says. "Yet when I look back I was already designing clothes for the comic book characters I created in middle school. I was in a good environment for fashion and socially there was a lot of room for individual styles that didn't conform to the norm." Like Claiborne, many students are awaiting their huge break, creating their very own fashion line. But like any other aspiration, it takes sacrifice, hard work, and dedication. "If I had my own clothing line it would be a mixture of everything I like," says senior Salimah Mercer, "which would be a variety of things such as: starting out with a funky section, a Victorian influence section, and a comfortable line." She has a variety of ideas for her own line, but also adds that it will be her own style.

Claiborne agrees that he would incorporate his personal style into his line. "What I can say about my style is that it is my own," he says. "I don't have a particular one that you would read about in a magazine. My line will most likely start off with one particular style and branch off to create more as resources become more available."

Mercer, who states she's been fashionable all her life, likes to keep up with the trends. "I really like the earth tones that are out, the higher collar blouses and the wider cut trousers... I love to wear polos and I'm really into layering them with tee and ties," said Salimah.

Claiborne states that he does not follow trends, however, he believes that trends are a good thing in the world of fashion.

"Trends are not for designers and creators," Claiborne says. "They are for those who are either more appreciative of the works, such as individuals who walk around and wish that they could paint yet can't... They have a great appreciation of the work, which is good because those are the people that invest in the creations."

Trying to make it big in the fashion world can be extremely tedious. Mercer understands this and shares her advice of not giving up. "With everything you do, be yourself. Don't be afraid to try new things and know your basics, know your craft."

Like any other job, it involves long hours, endless amount of creativity and also rejection. "Confidence is the key," says Claiborne.

Gospel Choir makes a Joyful Noise

By Stephanie Sokerka
Staff Writer

Those who walked by the Wicomico room on Saturday night would have heard a lot of noise. But for those who were in the Wicomico room, it was a different kind of noise. The SU Gospel Choir hosted its annual "Make A Joyful Noise" concert and filled the room with gospel singing, dancing and motivational speaking. It literally moved people to the floor, and touched their hearts, bringing a "joyful" noise to everyone.

The night started out with select members of SU's Gospel Choir singing harmoniously to pump up the audience. With their enthusiasm and spirit, they managed to get parents, faculty and students on their feet to clap along and shout praises of "Hallelujah."

After the music, it was time to take the mood down, and remind everyone the reason of being there. That reason was God. A peaceful scripture passage was read by SU student Charlie Ware. This was followed by a prayer of thankfulness, which was read by a representative for the Wesley Foundation. Through both readings, everyone in the room closed their eyes, bowed their heads, and praised the Lord.

The energy started again as the entire SU Gospel Choir took the stage. They sang three songs including: "There's been a change in me," "I shall survive," and lastly a three-part harmony called, "He has done marvelous things." Students felt each song was beautifully sung, with feelings of happiness and worship. "My favorite part was the singing," says junior Cerry Golibart. "It was great, I love gospel singing."

The music was then followed by dancing. The gospel dancers performed a beautiful, lyrical dance, which peacefully set the mood. "I thought the whole night was great, but I really liked the dance. It was put together and choreographed really well," says junior Thaddeus Hicks.

Last, but certainly not least, Craig Wilson, Minister of the Cathedral of Love, took the stage.

Craig is currently a senior at the University of Maryland Eastern Shore and states that he preached his first sermon at the young age of seven. Craig spoke words of encouragement to students, and directly related himself with them. "I thought the preacher was great. He is very direct and caught the attention of the different ages in the audience," says sophomore LaTice Penny.

He praised God and asked students to wake up and evaluate their relationship with God. He stated, "God sends problems and circumstances not to break you, but to wake you up to something new, to make you something better." His speech was filled with excitement and a love for God that touched everyone's hearts. "I try to bring a sense of encouragement through God's words. I try to let students know that God loves them," says Wilson of his speeches.

Overall, it was a night of joy. The SU Gospel Choir conducted the entire production, from great dancers to speakers and singers. Most importantly, this past Saturday night the Wicomico room was filled with a sense of unity, love, and thankfulness for God and for life.

96.3 WXSU Hosts ScrEMOween Campus radio station expects ghouls, other youth

By Josh Hughes
Staff Writer

Local student run radio station, 96.3 WXSU LPMF, will host a Halloween concert on October 31st. "This is the first official concert of WXSU" explains concert coordinator Garrett Davis. WXSU is the Salisbury University radio station and has a broadcast range of seven miles.

"[The concert] is really for people who enjoy the Alternative/Indie/Emo scene" Davis says.

The bands scheduled to perform that night include: The Receiving End of Sirens, Thin Dark Line, Letterfiv, Mercutio, Audio Revenge, Martin Pursley, and DJ Perky.

"I'm in Letterfiv" says Davis. "My band and I met The Receiving End of Sirens and Thin Dark Line on our way off from touring in another state. They're good friends of mine."

The Receiving End of Sirens is a 5-piece rock band from Boston, Massachusetts. They've headlined on the Wamped Tour and are often described as "Punk" or "Indie/Experimental."

Thin Dark Line hails from Reisterstown, Maryland.

Their new CD "The Resolution" comes out October 25th. Their music, which is largely AlternativeRock, can be previewed at <http://www.purevolume.com/thindarkline>. "This is our first show, and I hope it won't be our last" says Davis.

The doors open at 6 pm at the Wicomico room. Admission is $1.00 for students and

The Life and Times of Frida Kahlo

By Kimberly Orr
Staff Writer

If you appreciate Mexican art you are bound to love the movie, "Frida", which will be shown on campus Wednesday at 7 and 10 pm in Fulton and Caruthers Hall.

If there is one art based film to see this semester it is "Kahlo", and you don't want to miss it.

Kahlo's life began and ended in Mexico City, in her home known as the Blue House. She gave her birth date as July 7, 1910, but her birth certificate shows July 6, 1907. This is just one of the many lies Kahlo told about her life.

An interesting fact about Kahlo is that at age 6, Kahlo was stricken with polio, which caused her right leg to appear much thinner than the other. It was to remain that way permanently.

On September 17, 1925, at age 18, Kahlo was involved in a serious bus accident, which left her with a broken spinal column, a broken collarbone, broken ribs, a broken pelvis, and 11 fractures in her right leg. In addition her right foot was dislocated and crushed, and her shoulder was out of joint. For a month, Kahlo was forced to stay flat on her back, encased in a plaster cast and enclosed in a boxlike structure.

Kahlo's enormous strength and will to live allowed her to survive and make a remarkable recovery.

She began painting shortly after the accident because she was bored in bed. This became her lifelong profession.

Although Kahlo's recovery was miraculous (she regained her ability to walk), she did have relapses of tremendous pain and fatigue all throughout her life, which caused her to be hospitalized for long periods of time, bedridden at times, and also caused her to undergo numerous operations.

She once joked that she held the record for the most operations. Kahlo underwent about thirty operations in her lifetime.

She also turned to alcohol, drugs, and cigarettes to ease the pain of her physical suffering.

Once she was out and about after her accident, a close friend introduced Kahlo to the artistic crowd of Mexico, which included Tina Modotti (a well known photographer, actress, and communist) and Diego Rivera.

Diego and Kahlo were married on August 21, 1929. Their marriage consisted of love, affairs with other people, creative bonding, hate, and a divorce in 1940. Their marriage has been called the union between an elephant and a dove, because Diego was huge and very fat, and Kahlo was small (a little over 5 feet) and slender.

Kahlo only had one exhibition in Mexico and it was in the spring of 1933.

Kahlo's health was very bad at this time and doctors told her not to attend. Minutes after guests were allowed into the gallery, sirens were heard outside. The crowd went crazy for outside there was an ambulance accompanied by a motorcycle escort.

Kahlo Kahlo was being carried into her exhibition on a hospital stretcher.

The photographers and reporters were shocked. She was placed in her bed in the middle of the gallery. The mob of people went to greet her.

Kahlo told jokes, entertained the crowd, sang, and drank the whole evening. The exhibition was an amazing success.

"I hope the leaving is joyful and I hope never to return," says Kaulo.

But her life wasn't all up hill from here. She attempted suicide a couple of times and on July 13, 1954, Kahlo died. No official autopsy was done but cause of death was rumored to be suicide.

It wasn't until after Kahlo's death that her art became the phenomenon that it is today and the movie does her life story a great justice. It's one of those rare films that one can watch and get the true story of the woman many called the most famous artist who never became famous.

The Lovely Bones Redefining Death for All

By Stephanie Sokerka
Staff Writer

Death: It's an inevitable part of life that no human can escape. Everyone has thoughts of when, where, or how they are going to die.

However, so many people fill their mind with the fear of death that many cease to imagine what happens after death. Most people have an idea of what "heaven" will be like, but one will never know until they get there. For now one can only imagine.

"The Lovely Bones" written by Alice Sebold, takes the story of a child's brutal death and turns it into a heart-breaking yet beautiful story about devastation, death, and family. She takes us into the souls of the living and dead, forcing the reader to experience the heartbreak and peacefulness that death can bring to all of us.

The story starts out with the narrator Susie Salmon already in heaven. Her murder occurred on December 6, 1973, a time when people had trouble grasping that a child could be raped and murdered.

Following her death, Salmon watches from above as her family tries to conceive the tragic idea that their beloved daughter and sister has been brutally taken from the earth.

As the days go by, and no evidence is found, she watches from above as each member of her family becomes hard and emotionless to her loss.

On the other side of life, Salmon is enjoying her heaven. She describes to the readers her new home.

With time however, Salmon realizes that everyone's heaven is different. Heaven is what you truly wish it to be.

"When I first entered heaven, I thought everyone saw what I saw. That in everyone's heaven there were soccer goalposts in the distance and lumbering women throwing shot put and javelin."

From heaven Salmon watches over everyone, especially her murderer. She watches his actions; she reads his thoughts; she is enamored by his presence. Salmon learns from heaven, that her murder was not the first he has completed. He is, in fact, a serial rapist and murderer, and still "innocently" lives two houses down from her family.

One would think that Salmon's murder at 13 would fill her with bitterness and anger as she watches from heaven as her sister and her friends grow up, and live life achieving all the things that she never could.

However, Salmon is not angry at all about her death. She is filled with curiosity about her heaven and also her family. She is regretful not of her death, but for her family and friends who are left to sort the pieces of her death. She watches all of them with a hopeful eye that they do everything in life that she can not.

"The Lovely Bones", is written in a beautiful, narrative style. It is filled with endless descriptions that take one's imagination to a whole new level, especially what heaven entails.

However, even though the book concentrates heavily on the imagery of heaven, it is not the main idea of the novel.

This story is about Salmon watching her family heal and break apart after her death. It is about the restoration of a family, and how they find their way back to each other.

Until the end of the novel, Salmon still visits her family, attends family parties, and watches over them because "...in the air between the living, spirits bob and weave, and laugh with us. They are the oxygen we breathe."

The Lovely Bones makes light of a tragedy, brings a new perspective of family and a healthy idea of death.

By now you must have heard that Sylvester Stallone has signed on for Rocky Balboa, the sixth – and dare I say, final? – of the Rocky movies, which began in 1976, way before any of us college students became our parents' favorite mistakes. And if you haven't heard, maybe you should stop watching Laguna and get caught up on your Sly news, Geez.

Anyway, Sly has said he apparently feels the need to write the final chapter to Rocky's life, a story about "self-examination, an opportunity to see what kind of person he is and act on it," co-producer Dan Taylor said. Also, this movie isn't about him winning, but just competing. I'm sorry, but that's a loser's attitude, and Rocky is no loser. He single-handedly stopped the Cold War, for crying out loud. Now that's a way to go out. The best Rocky, Rocky IV, should've been the last.

But this useless sequel has got me thinking: what if other sports movies had unneeded sequels? What would they be like?

So without further ado, here we go.

More Field of Dreams. Now a millionaire, Ray Kinsella becomes greedy and begins branching off into other sports. In Nebraska he builds a football field, in Minnesota a hockey rink, and in New York a basketball court, all in hopes to allow more ghosts the chance to play. Instead he bankrupts and ends up selling the farm to his brother-in-law.

D4: Mighty Ducks. The kids are in college now, and Emilio Estevez needs a job, so it's a perfect combination. But when Charlie Conway and Adam Banks once again get on bad terms, Coach Bombay has only one option: the Flying V. That's until they actually play a game in a place we like to call reality and realize they actually all suck.

Hoosiers: The Return. No, that's just wrong.

Caddyshack II. Ouch, they already did that. With the completion of Fletch Lives Right after the release of this movie, Chevy Chase had officially hit rock bottom.

But why limit this article to just

Sly, please, do not fly now...or ever again

the sports genre. Let's continue with others, shall we?

Jurassic Park IV. We finally get to see what we've been waiting for: the apocalyptic showdown between man and dinosaur. The 'saur dominate for most of the film until Jeff Goldblum saves the day by killing a T-Rex with a bazooka. All other humans follow suit, the movie ends within five minutes of Goldblum's initial kill.

Roadhouse 2. Dalton somehow stumbles upon a time machine and ends up in 1977. Landing a bouncing gig at a New York night club, he rips every drugged-up loser's throat out, ending the disco era three years prematurely. When he returns to present time, statues are erected around the world in his honor.

The Return of the Kickboxer. Oh, that's right, every Van Damme movie is the same.

Under Siege 3: Ryback's Law. Ditto.

Escape from Detroit. Bear with me on this one. Snake Plissken's back, and this time he's thrust in the middle of Ford Field and must escape before the end of a Lions-Cardinals game or the "virus" put in him will kill him. Fortunately, Kurt Warner and Joey Harrington are the QBs, so Snake has ample time to create another unrealistic escape.

Rambo IV. This is real, too, but let's hear it from Sly: "There has been movement in that area, yes. Of course, it won't be what you think – not the same Rambo with the head-band. In keeping with some sort of believability, he would be passing the torch to a younger generation of high-tech combatants. We're working on an interesting premise where Rambo is brought back from living on a ranch somewhere, and because of his skills in jungle warfare and survival, he's asked to lead a young group in a search-and-rescue mission. They can't believe this decrepit guy is a war hero but when their technology fails, they see where Rambo excels."

Star Wars Episodes VII-IX. Sure, Lucas can't be that dumb. Can he?

Sea Gulls prove stronger than Peacocks

SU prepares to snap the ball during their game against St. Peter's on Saturday.

By Angelo Torres
Staff Writer

Salisbury's opening drive was cut short by a St. Peter's fumble recovery on second down, forcing the SU defense to take over. Injured on the play was senior Leroy Satchell, forcing him to sit for the remaining minutes of the first quarter.

"I just got a little banged up," said Satchell. Fortunately for the senior and Salisbury's offense, Satchell was able to return and went on to score three touchdowns while allowing a Peacock score. The score followed a good defensive stand from the Gulls defense, forcing the Peacocks to punt after a sack on third and long.

On the ensuing punt, a flag was thrown against the manors for roughing the kicker which gave the visitors another chance on offense. The new set of downs began much like the first, with SU backing their opponents into yet another third and long situation. However, the Peacocks took advantage of their second chance, and passed for a 72 yard touchdown play.

The new set of downs began much like the first, with SU backing their opponents into yet another third and long situation. However, the Peacocks took advantage of their second chance, and passed for a 72 yard touchdown play.

Returning to the weather conditions was Satchell, who reentered the game after cornerback Byron Westbrook intercepted his second red zone pass of the afternoon. Using Satchell as a decoy, quarterback Travis Peet's hauled the ball to Francis Bryant, who ran 31 yards to midfield. After extending their drive on a third and short, SU converted its first of four consecutive touchdowns with a Peters pass to receiver Joseph Early, capping off an eighty yard drive.

Extending his undefeated streak (7-0 as a starter) behind center was Peters who has stepped up as the Sea Gulls quarterback in the absence of injured quarterback Dustin Johnson. For Peters, it's all about mental preparation.

"I always approach the game with a starter's mentality," said quarterback Travis Peters. Coach Sherman Wood agrees.

"He's intelligent. When it comes to football, Travis is very serious and he prepares very well. He spends more time in the film room than anyone," said Wood.

Having a healthy Satchell and confident

Peters proved to be key in Saturday's victory. This was especially evident in the fourth quarter when Salisbury attempted to put the game out of reach by going for it on fourth and short situations. According to their coach, the Gulls had their reasons for not punting the ball away.

"There were two reasons we went for it on fourth down. We didn't want to put our kickers in a situation where they could get hurt because the field was in bad shape. The other reason is that our offensive line averages three hundred pounds," said Wood.

After the first fourth and one situation, the Gulls found themselves on the Peacock goal line, on fourth down with three yards to go. SU converted the touchdown, capping off a 51 yard drive, and extended the lead to 34-16.

"We're definitely confident in our ability," said Satchell. "Teams can't stop us, we can only stop ourselves."

Women's soccer gains momentum as they prepare for tournament play

By Matt Petersen
Staff Writer

Without a win in nearly a month, this past week was huge for the Salisbury Women's Soccer team as it tries to make a late season push and enter the CAC playoffs with some positive momentum. The game against Rowan on Tuesday and the game against Marymount University on Saturday were tests to see if the Gulls have what it takes to put the rest of the season behind them and focus on the playoffs. The Sea Gulls played well but lost to Rowan, 1-0, and then finally snapped their losing streak with a 2-1 win over Marymount.

Salisbury lost its ninth game of the season in a well fought out of conference battle to Rowan. Despite many scoring opportunities, including four early corner kicks, the Gulls could not find the back of the net. The lone Rowan goal came in the 28th minute when Aimee Yerkes netted the go ahead goal. The goal was assisted by Rowan's Karen Patruno. Salisbury was out shot 12 to 6 in the match, but goalie Kate Hendrickson played well, forcing errant shots and recording four saves. Despite solid defense Salisbury could not come up with a crucial win at home.

Coming off of a tough loss, Salisbury needed a big win on the road against Marymount. Jessica Reed, a senior midfielder, set the tone with an early unassisted goal in the 18th minute. Meghan Mabey, midfielder, added to the Salisbury lead just a few minutes later in the 24th minute. Mabey's goal was assisted by freshman Kelli Salter. Salisbury went into the half with a 2-0 lead and held strong in the second period, only allowing one goal to Marymount's Alisha Parker.

The Gulls out shot Marymount 19 to 13, and took two more corner kicks than their opponents. Hendrickson had another strong performance with three saves and only one goal against, bringing her season average to a stellar 1.54 goals against per game.

The conference win should give the squad some momentum as they head into the home stretch of the season. The Gulls have two more conference games before the CAC tournament starts. If the team can continue to play solid defense and replicate the offense effort they had against Marymount, the Gulls should make a good showing in the post season, and hopefully push for the CAC crown.

Men's Soccer Takes Down Christopher Newport

By Shawn Nisson
Staff Writer

The Salisbury University Men's Soccer team beat non-conference foe Christopher Newport 3-2 extending their winning streak to 15 games. The Gulls (14-0-1) are ranked No. 1 in the NCAA Division III South Region, and jumped up two spots to No. 5 in the NSCAA national poll.

Senior captain goalkeeper Jason Cranford recorded four saves and improved to 5-0 on the season, in his third game back after recovering from a broken hand.

The Gulls came out fired up in the first half scoring their first goal only 30 seconds into the game. On the first possession of the game Whittington the Gull's assist leader (5) got a pass from Senior Reid Klopp and put the ball in the back of the net from ten yards out. Christopher Newport (9-4) responded quickly scoring 4:27 later and knotting the game up at one.

Whittington's right foot and in the empty net. Fogarty, the Captains leading goal scorer with eight, struck again 2:40 later cashing in after Kenny Huttman's shot was blocked by a Gulls defender and was loose in front of the net tying the game 2-2. Gulls keeper Cranford came up with a huge save off of a free kick by Huttman from 20 yards out, saving the ball from going into the upper right corner, keeping the game tied at half. The game went back and forth in the second half with both teams having chances but not following through. Whittington broke the tie with just over 7 minutes remaining in the match. Mills fed Whittington the ball and he was able to score his team leading 12th goal of the year to put the Gulls up for good 3-2.

Salisbury out-shot the Captains 16-13 for the game, and had a 9-1 shot advantage in the second half when it mattered most. The Gulls will compete in next week's tournament for the Capital Athletic Conference title; the Gulls have home field advantage throughout the playoffs.

XCountry runs into rough conditions at Elizabethtown

The Sea Gulls ran at the Elizabethtown Invitational in Elizabethtown, PA on Saturday, October 22.

The weather was fairly chilly and rainy, but the Seagulls gutted it out. The racing distances were different from what they have run during the season, but they felt it was solid preparation for the upcoming championship meets nonetheless.

The men had a decent performance, placing 5th out of 8 teams. Four of the teams were NCAA Division II teams, three were Division III teams, and there was a running club as well. Loch Haven University is ranked 11th in the nation and Shippensburg College is ranked 13th in the nation for the NCAA Division II.

"The conditions were rough for all the teams," said Zack Dickerson, a political science major and a minor in history. "You really had to tough it up and stick with it. I can see us comin' on good. CAC's are in two weeks and we're getting healthy for it. We're really gonna be strong for CAC's."

The women ran well, finishing 5th out of 9 teams. Running in this race were five NCAA Division II teams, three Division III teams, and a junior college team. Among them were the Bloomsburg women, ranked 15th overall in the nation for the NCAA Division II. The Seagulls held up quite strongly against them.

"We start out really fast and stuck together," said Briana Wodoslawsky, a freshman nursing major. "Zack calls us a pack of Smarties."

The head coach, Jim Jones was fairly pleased with the results. "I thought I saw some things we could work on to get prepared for the conference meet. It was good to test ourselves against very good teams in our region and NCAA Division II. I think it's going to help us a lot when we get to our conference meet and our regionals by running at a meet like we ran at today."

The Sea Gulls will take on stiff competition at the Capital Athletic Conference Championships at Montgomery College in Rockville, MD.
